JF50	W60	.jpg	JF50 Workshop Date 1956 Metallurgy Lab. Tensometer for working out the tensile strength of metal rods. It's still there in a cupboard. Probably not been used since we left. Impact toughness tester next, and then the Brinell hardness tester. Brinell hardness is determined by forcing a hard steel or carbide sphere of a specified diameter under a specified load into the surface of a material and measuring the diameter of the indentation left after the test. Remember Mr Davies telling that to us? See, you should have paid more attention. 3 47pm.	Colin Cadle
JF51	W61	.jpg	JF51 Workshop Date 1956 The Tensometer. We had to make up little specimens on the lathe, to a profile checked against a small metal template. The specimen, when tested, gave a loud bang at fracture.	Colin Cadle
JF52	W62	.jpg	JF52 Workshop Date 1956 Forge area. The holder held those odd shaped tongs. We heated the items with town gas and compressed air. Sometimes we plunged the red hot specimens into cold water. Remember case-hardening? And those straw, brown, blue tempering temperatures.	Colin Cadle

Additional Photos and Documents from the Kingsland Archive

Two large lever-arch files containing photographs and other material that JC Kingsland used for display purposes. Most of the material is on a card backing and a lot of the photographs have captions.

It has not been possible to fully sort this material as over the years the display panels had become separated and mixed up. Many of the photos are duplicated in both the Kingsland and Francis Archive photos.

390	JF 25-	ST28	Steve Jackson on 27 Jan 2007 writes: I believe that the photo must be dated about 1970. The reason for this is that I joined the school in '67 and I can remember having a chat with the chap when I was in perhaps the 3rd form. Also, I think his hair is more 1970 than 1965. I cannot remember his name, so I cannot answer the question Who is he? However the contraption in the photo is a computer that he made all himself. Apparently it was an 'analogue computer'. Amongst other things, it could solve quadratic and simultaneous equations. Clearly he was/is a very talented chap. I remember being absolutely captivated by what he was saying. He was so 'matter of fact' about the whole thing though, as if it was the sort of thing that anybody could do. I had never seen a computer before, let alone be able to make one. He made all of the circuit boards inside, himself. The dials and switches he bought. The casing was made from the same wood from which we made our little boxes in the engineering workshop. Graham Southon emailing 2 Nov 2009 reckons it is Ian Robinson who lived in Alma Road, Orpington. Ian would have been at Cray from Sept 1966 to June 1973. Graham believes Ian is now a "big cheese" at the National Physics labs in Teddington.
